For fathers who actually want to be fathers, lowering the child support for having 52 over-nights is an absolute must. Reducing arguments, reducing the father's financial struggles and making a more acceptable level of payment.

From a father who has had to fight the courts and fight the mother for every minute I have, and also provide the same shelter, clothes, toys, and entertainment the mother does, the current situation has only shown that a fathers role is purely financial.

Enacting this proposal, lowering the overnights from 127 to 52, is just one small step of relief for the non-custodial parent. In my situation I have taken every day off of work when my son is sick, participated in his school, sports, and take him whenever the mother is busy, which is often and un-scheduled, yet I have not received any financial help for my efforts. The parent that has the child the least, pays the most, and the current system is very discriminating and humiliating and it is time for not just this change, but many others as well.

The non-custodial parents who do not involve their lives with their children should be the ones forced to pay.
